

ABSTRACT

A router is connected to a number of groups, such as xDSL modems, that each have a number of group members, such as set top 5 boxes. When a member of the group identifies a new subscribed-to channel that is to be sent to the member, the router insures that multiple channels are not continuously sent to the same group member.

10